Stranger in the Village Reflecting on Racism with James Baldwin 3.9.2023 – 7.1.2024

Media release Aarau, June 2023

In his famous text Stranger in the Village, the US-American writer James Baldwin addressed the racism that informed his stay in Switzerland in the 1950s. Baldwin's words continue to inspire many artists to this day. They hold up a mirror to us as a society and have lost none of their relevance. The group exhibition explores belonging and exclusion through current works by local and international artists, raising questions that concern us all.

The starting point for the exhibition Stranger in the Village is the eponymous text by the world-famous US-American author James Baldwin (1924-1987). In the early 1950s, Baldwin takes up residence for a few months in the Swiss mountain village of Leukerbad in the Valais. When he retreats there to write his debut novel, the residents greet him with "astonishment, curiosity, amusement, and outrage". He is considered a "living wonder" and called the "N-word". Baldwin realises that there are still regions in this world where a Black person is considered a discovery. He writes about this experience in his essay Stranger in the Village, which appears in Harper's Magazine in 1953. Baldwin analyses the everyday racism in the mountain village to arrive at more wide-ranging reflections on the topic in his home country, the United States. His text is a call to become aware of existing power structures and discriminatory prejudices and their destructive consequences.

How do we respond to Baldwin's words in Switzerland today? In a time of heightened awareness of social and structural injustices, the Aargauer Kunsthaus also intends to highlight issues of racism with art. The exhibition Stranger in the Village brings together numerous works of art from the middle of the 20th century to today, adopting an interdisciplinary, collaborative, and kaleidoscopic approach. At the very beginning of the exhibition, we encounter James Baldwin's voice in the 1962 film version of Stranger in the Village by Pierre Koralnik (*1937). Quotes from the text serve as a leitmotif, organising the exhibition into various chapters, which present works by contemporary artists and current positions in dialogic ensembles, allowing them to form a connection.

Omar Ba (*1977, Geneva and Dakar) and Sasha Huber (*1975, Finland, Switzerland and Haiti) have created new works, especially for this exhibition. Works by artists working in Switzerland, such as James Bantone, Denise Bertschi, and Ceylan Öztrük, as well as by internationally known artists like Kader Attia, Marlene Dumas, Glenn Ligon, and Carrie Mae Weems are also on display. Among the approximately forty artists assembled for this exhibition, there will also be new names to be discovered or rediscovered, such as the US-American Vincent O. Carter or the Congolese André M'Bon, who both worked in Switzerland for decades. At the centre of the exhibition, an interactive room provides visitors with several options to participate creatively and to engage more deeply with the topic of racism.

The exhibition was designed by a museum team that enjoys the privileges of the majority and never experienced racism directly. To enhance knowledge, dialogue, and diversity, the exhibition was supported by an "Advisory Board". This advisory committee consists of people from different areas of expertise and different backgrounds. They are connected in that they have devoted themselves to a more profound exploration of topics such as racial discrimination, exclusion, belonging, or decolonisation—always in relation to Switzerland. In preparation for the exhibition and beyond, the entire Aargauer Kunsthaus team is receiving training from Estefania Cuero, diversity expert and coach, who was invited to lead anti-racism workshops with the entire Kunsthaus team. This will help us understand that racism is not only an individual but also a structural matter. The question is not, "Am I racist?", but rather, "How can I become aware of my own racism?" The exhibition will conclude with a multitude of possible answers, always through the prism of art.
